Luckily everything worked fine and i was able to calibrate the pcm. After the process i got an other error. The calibration process never got fininshed. I plugged in my keyboard/mouse again, quit the system, and started the process again. The result was the same, i could calibrate the pcm, but the calibration process never got fininshed. I sent e-mail to HP and asked for help, the after 2 weeks i have not recived any answer. I ended up opening a problem on their . A: I have tried the VCM suite before, the serial number for the PCM program in VCM is the ID you can find on the back side of the control panel. That was quite an extraordinary performance by the city of Los Angeles. Here's something you should know about these four months: they are long. Because the city has been bombarded with requests for permits, the city has been forced to cut in half the number of days it can process application. Until Friday, it had the biggest backlog of permits in the city's history. Now, the backlog has been cut in half. If your permit was at the top of the pile, you probably just got it. Because as the number of days for a permit rose, the number of people who got their permits in time dropped. As of Tuesday, the city had about 3,500 building permits and roughly 2,500 people had permits in hand, the Los Angeles Department of Building and Safety says. On Friday, the number of building permits was just over 1,900 and there were about 1,300 people getting permits in the last week. So the backlog has been cut in half. Here's the big question: Where did this extra time come from? The city faces a budget gap of as much as $62 million and has laid off about 500 workers since December. But the city says it is having no problems getting building permits as it has until now. So, when the rainy season starts, the city will face the new problem of flooding. -- Stephanie Wash twitter.com/stephwash twitter.com/latimestimes Photo: Mike Thompson / Los Angeles Times Q: What does 🞎🞎🞎🞎🞎🞎 mean? Since 🞎[🞎🞎🞎]{🞎}🞎🞎🞎= to live and 🞎[🞎🞎🞎🞎]{🞎🞎🞎}🞎= to be able to do something, it means that the speaker can do something while living. It means, " f678ea9f9e
